

Rapunzel's tears cured his blindness and they lived happily ever after together in the kingdom.

One day after months of wandering the forest, the Prince heard Rapunzel's singing and blindly wandered towards her voice.

Rapunzel was so happy when she saw him she cried tears of happiness.

When the prince climbed into the tower the witch cast a spell on him that made him lose his sight.

The prince, now blind and with a broken heart, wandered through the forest for many days.

The witch realized what had been going on. She screamed and shouted in anger then she cut off Rapunzel's hair and sent her off deep into the forest.

When the prince arrived to the tower and shouted, 'Rapunzel, Rapunzel! Let down your hair!' the witch threw down Rapunzel's cut of hair and he unknowingly climbed up.

The prince and Rapunzel began to secretly meet every day after the witch left.

One day, however, Rapunzel accidentally said to the witch “My, you are so much heavier than my prince!”

The Prince proceeded to hide and to watch the tower and he saw the witch calling to Rapunzel and then climbing up her hair.

The next day he did the same thing himself. Once he got to Rapunzel, they talked and they laughed and they instantly fell in love and wanted to get married.

One day a prince was riding through the forest when he heard Rapunzel singing a beautiful song that she sang to help her pass the time all alone in her prison.

The Prince wanted to get in her tower and meet her, but he realised there was no door. Just then he saw the witch coming through the forest.

Every day, the witch would come to the tower and call, “Rapunzel, Rapunzel, let down your long hair!”. Rapunzel would then let her long hair fall out the window.

The witch would then hold onto her hair and climb up into the tower.

The witch called the girl Rapunzel (a different name for rampion) and locked the girl away in a tower in the forest.

Rapunzel grew to become a beautiful young woman with long braids of thick black hair.

The witch made him promise that they would give their first child to her - in return she would not punish them and they could have all the rampion they wanted.

One day the wife gave birth to a beautiful baby girl and immediately the witch came and took the baby away from them.

However, the flower could only be found in the neighbouring witches garden, so the husband snuck into the garden to steal some.

When he was stealing the Rampion he got caught by the witch, who threatened to punish him.

There once lived a husband and wife.
They were childless but always longed for a child.

One special day the wife became pregnant. However, during her pregnancy she became sick and needed Rampion to cure her.
